

A young woman named Anya, haunted by a recurring dream of a forgotten melody, discovers an antique music box in her grandmother's attic. Intrigued, she winds it up, and the melody, strangely familiar, fills the room. As she listens, fragments of a long-lost memory resurface – a childhood spent with her grandmother in a quaint seaside village, a melody she used to hum while playing with seashells on the beach. The music box becomes a portal to her past, allowing her to reconnect with a part of herself she thought was lost forever. With each note, the melody weaves a tapestry of forgotten joys and gentle sorrows, ultimately leading her to understand the enduring power of memory and love.